

THE PSYCHOPATHIC SOCIETY:

part 6: ON THE SUBJECT OF “DWEMS”.

alexis dolgorukii © 1997

As anyone who has been following this series knows, I am describing The United States of America as a “Psychopathic society” because like all psychopaths, its relationship with reality is tenuous in the extreme. In many instances the perceptions of what they like to call “Americans” (and that too, “fudges” reality) have no relationship to reality whatsoever. Because of that I also regularly describe the United States of America as a “disintegrating society”. For it is disintegrating.

In no other way does this make itself more patently obvious than in the topic I want to discuss now...that of “DWEMS”. “DWEM” stands for “Dead White European Male”, and thanks to the triumph of the “C-Minus Students”, which I discussed in an earlier essay in this series, any one who fits into the parameters that “DWEM” defines, is asserted to be irrelevant if not harmful to students and people in this society today. The cravens at the head of our Universities and School systems today have totally surrendered to this utterly insane notion and as a result, our student bodies are now more ignorant than ever.

That this absolutely insane perception grows out of the Civil Rights movement is a matter of horror and shame to me as I have been involved in the battle for equal rights for all people since 1950. But the attainment of equal rights has nothing to do with the mind set that gives us this kind of insanity.

The mind set to which I am referring appears to have grown out of the “Black Power” movement and the “Feminist Movement” and where it’s entirely fallacious is in the fact that while everyone needs, and is clearly absolutely entitled to self esteem, and self respect, it cannot and must not be gained by way of disrespect of those who deserve nothing but respect. There’s another pertinent factor here, respect and esteem are not the same thing. One of the most important aspects of a rational and successful society is that its people respect one another, and one another’s rights. Esteem is something one earns, everyone is entitled to just as much esteem as they personally earn and deserve. The denigration of others is no way to attain either respect or esteem.

Whether anyone really likes it or not, our society in the USA is the product of the ideas and philosophies and inventions of “DEAD WHITE EUROPEAN MALES” or, latterly, of White Males of European Origin. Our planetary Society is what it is because of these same “Dead White European Males” and also “Dead Non White Chinese Males” and “Dead Indian males”. Most of the intellectual and scientific underpinning of our planetary society stems from these sources. And whether it is politically convenient or not, it was Europe that produced most of what we presently value.

It does not matter at all that women were not encouraged or allowed to make these kinds of contributions (though some clearly did do so despite all barriers), it does not matter at all that the inhabitants of Africa South of the Mediterranean Littoral, for whatever reason, did not develop the kind of civilizations that produced the culture in which we now live. It is equally true, however, that it is far from reasonable to blame European Colonialism for all of Africa's problems, and the problems greatly antedate Colonialism. This is also true in South America in which no European set foot until the early sixteenth century.

To banish Shakespeare, Bacon, Descartes, Voltaire, Kant, and Pushkin and thousands others, from their places of vital importance in our schools because they happened to be born in Europe and of the male sex is an absolutely clear indication of the peculiar psychosis so prevalent in our society. The motivations for so doing are infantile and utterly without merit. We are letting the evil drive out the good. To cast aside the entire basis of our civilization because some people were wronged by it, is utterly insane.